Imam Sadiq as Portrayed in Muntaha al-Amal

Zohre Dehdasht[1]

Abstract:* This document presents an anthology of the life, virtues, teachings, and miracles of Imam Ja'far al-Sadiq (AS), the sixth Imam of the Shi'a school of thought. It is based on a rewrite of the classic book Muntaha al-Amal by Sheikh Abbas Qumi. The text covers his birth, his physical and moral characteristics, his profound scientific status acknowledged by Sunni scholars, selected sermons, miraculous events, his confrontations with the oppressive Abbasid caliphs (specifically Mansur), his martyrdom, his children, and his loyal companions. The narrative highlights his role in solidifying Islamic jurisprudence and his unique approach to training scholars and guiding the community during a tumultuous political era.

Keywords: Imam Sadiq, Ja'far ibn Muhammad, Shi'a Islam, Mansur al-Dawaniqi, Islamic History, Hadith, Miracles, Companions, Ahl al-Bayt.

---

[1] Religious author

Chapter 1: Personal Characteristics of the Imam

Birth and Titles The blessed birth of Imam Ja'far al-Sadiq (AS) occurred on Friday, the 17th of Rabi' al-Awwal in the year 83 AH, coinciding with the birth anniversary of the Holy Prophet (PBUH). This day possesses immense blessings, and the righteous from the Prophet's family have always revered it. Fasting on this day holds great reward. His name is Ja'far, his Kunya (agnomen) is Abu Abdillah, and his titles include Sabir (Patient), Fadil (Virtuous), and Tahir (Pure), with the most famous being al-Sadiq (The Truthful).

The Name "Al-Sadiq" It is narrated from Imam Zain al-Abidin (AS) that he was asked: "Who is the Imam after you?" He replied: "Muhammad al-Baqir, who splits knowledge open." They asked: "And after him?" He replied: "Ja'far, whose name in the heavens is 'Al-Sadiq'." They asked: "Why is he specifically named Sadiq (Truthful) when all of you are truthful?" The Imam replied: "My father informed me from the Messenger of God (PBUH) that he said: 'When my son Ja'far ibn Muhammad... is born, name him al-Sadiq; for the fifth descendant of his son will also be named Ja'far, but he will falsely claim the Imamate and create lies against God. He is 'Ja'far the Liar' (Kadhdhab) in the sight of God...'" Imam Sajjad (AS) then wept, foreseeing the trials caused by this false claimant .

Physical Appearance Imam Sadiq (AS) was of medium height, with a radiant face, white complexion, and a prominent nose. He had black, curly hair and a black mole on his blessed cheek.

His Noble Mother His mother was the noble lady Umm Farwah, the daughter of Qasim ibn Muhammad ibn Abi Bakr. Imam Sadiq (AS) described her saying: "My mother was among those who believed, were wary of God, and did good; and God loves the doers of good" . She was a woman of such piety that she was sometimes referred to as the "Mother of the Noble One." Once, she was seen circumambulating the Kaaba disguised in a simple cloak. When she touched the Black Stone with her left hand, a man (likely a Sunni scholar) objected, saying she erred by using the left hand. She replied: "We are independent of your knowledge," demonstrating her confidence as a woman raised in the house of Imamate and jurisprudence .

Chapter 2: Moral Virtues and Noble Conduct

The View of Sunni Scholars Sheikh Mufid writes that Imam Sadiq (AS) was the successor to his father and surpassed all his brothers in merit. His knowledge was so vast that it was carried by travelers to all corners of the earth. No other member of the Ahl al-Bayt has had as many traditions recorded from them as he did. The number of his reliable narrators is counted up to four thousand . Famous Sunni Imams like Malik ibn Anas and Abu Hanifa narrated from him. Abu Hanifa famously said: "If it were not for those two years (I spent with Ja'far ibn Muhammad), Nu'man (Abu Hanifa) would have perished".

The Most Learned Scholar It is narrated that Mansur al-Dawaniqi (the Abbasid Caliph), trying to diminish Imam Sadiq's status, ordered Abu Hanifa to prepare his most difficult questions to stump the Imam. Abu Hanifa prepared forty difficult questions. Abu Hanifa relates: "I entered upon Mansur, and Ja'far ibn Muhammad was sitting on his right. His awe-inspiring presence took hold of me more than Mansur's. I began posing the questions. For every question, the Imam would answer: 'You say such-and-such, the people of Medina say such-and-such, and we say such-and-such.' He would sometimes agree with us, sometimes with them, and sometimes oppose both, until he answered all forty questions without faltering." Abu Hanifa declared: "Is it not true that the most learned of people is the one most knowledgeable of the differences in people's opinions?" .

Reverence for the Prophet Malik ibn Anas says: "I used to visit Ja'far ibn Muhammad. He was always in one of three states: either fasting, praying, or remembering God. When he wanted to narrate a Hadith from the Prophet (PBUH), his color would change to green or yellow out of awe, to the point that he was unrecognizable." Malik adds: "One year I went to Hajj with him. When his camel stood at the place of Ihram, he tried to say 'Labbayk' (Here I am, O Lord), but his voice would choke, and he nearly fell from his camel. I said: 'O son of the Messenger of God, you must say it.' He replied: 'O son of Abi Amir, how can I dare say Labbayk, fearing that the Lord might reply: La Labbayk (You are not accepted)?'" .

Debate Style: "Be Like Your Master" A companion named Mufaddal saw the atheist Ibn Abi al-Awja in the Prophet's mosque denying the Creator. Mufaddal became angry and shouted at him. Ibn Abi al-Awja asked: "If you are from the companions of Ja'far ibn Muhammad, he does not speak to us this way. He hears far worse from us than what you heard, yet he never becomes abusive or angry. He listens patiently to our arguments until we have exhausted our points, and then with a few words, he dismantles our logic so effectively that we have no escape. If you are his follower, speak to us as he does" .

"Good is Better from You" A man named Shaqrani (a descendant of a freed slave of the Prophet) sought a favor from the Caliph Mansur but found no one to help him. He saw Imam Sadiq (AS) and asked for help. The Imam went inside, secured the grant for him, and upon giving it to him, whispered: "A good deed is good from anyone, but it is better from you because of your connection to us; and a bad deed is bad from anyone, but it is worse from you because of your connection to us." The Imam said this because Shaqrani was known for drinking wine. He admonished him kindly and indirectly, acknowledging his connection to the Prophet's family while correcting his behavior .

Feeding the Poor in the Rain Mu'alla ibn Khunays narrates: "One rainy night, I saw Imam Sadiq (AS) leaving his house. I followed him. Something fell from his hand. I approached and greeted him. He asked me to help gather the scattered loaves of bread. He was carrying a heavy sack of bread to the shelter of Banu Sa'idah. He placed a loaf or two under the garment of every sleeping poor person there. I asked: 'Are they Shias (know the Truth)?' He replied: 'If they knew the Truth (were Shias), I would have shared even the stew and salt with them (meaning he would have given them even more)'" .

Guaranteeing Paradise A neighbor of Abu Basir in Kufa was a wealthy associate of the ruler, constantly holding parties with music and alcohol, disturbing Abu Basir. When Abu Basir complained to him, the man said: "I am a prisoner of Shaytan and my desires. Perhaps if you mention my state to your master Imam Sadiq, God might save me." When Abu Basir narrated this to the Imam, the Imam said: "Tell him: 'If you abandon these sins, I guarantee Paradise for you on behalf of God.'" Upon hearing this message, the man wept, repented, and gave away all his ill-gotten wealth, even his clothes, standing naked at his door. Abu Basir brought him clothes. Days later, the man fell ill. On his deathbed, he opened his eyes and said to Abu Basir: "O Abu Basir! Your master fulfilled his promise," and then he died. Later, when Abu Basir visited Imam Sadiq, before he could speak, the Imam called out from inside: "O Abu Basir! We fulfilled our guarantee for your friend" .

Chapter 3: Hadiths and Sermons

Contentment and Action The Imam said to Humran ibn A'yan: "Look at those who are below you in ability and wealth, and do not look at those above you; this will make you more content with what you have. Know that a small, continuous deed done with certainty (Yaqin) is better than many deeds done without certainty" .

On Isolation and Socializing The Imam advised: "If you can manage not to leave your house, do so; for when you go out, you must avoid backbiting, lying, envy, showing off, and flattery. The believer's house is his best hermitage..." . Compiler's Note: Traditions praising isolation usually refer to avoiding evil company or times of great corruption. Other traditions emphasize visiting believers and social duties. The Imam clarified: "The best isolation is to isolate yourself from the evil actions of people, while your body is with them but your heart disagrees with their sins" .

Worldly Ups and Downs "When the world favors a person, it lends him the virtues of others (people praise him for what he doesn't have); and when it turns away from him, it strips him of his own virtues (people ignore his good qualities)".

Prepare Your Own Provisions A man asked for advice. The Imam said: "Prepare your belongings (for the Hereafter), send your provisions ahead, be the executor of your own will, and do not ask others to send what you need after you are gone" .

Sleep and Speech "O son of Jundab! Sleep little at night and speak little during the day... for excessive sleep leaves a person poor on the Day when people need their deeds" .

The Troops of Iblis The Imam said: "Iblis (Satan) has no army more powerful than women and anger". (Referring to the trials men face through attraction and loss of temper).

Chapter 4: Selected Miracles

Knowledge of Deeds Dawood al-Raqqi says: "I was with Imam Sadiq (AS) when he suddenly said: 'O Dawood, your deeds were presented to me on Thursday. I saw that you maintained ties with your cousin, and this pleased me. However, this act of kindness will hasten his death (because he is unworthy/hostile, yet your kindness cuts off his excuse).'" Dawood confirms he had sent money to a hostile cousin before leaving for Medina .

The Yellow Scroll Abu Basir asked the Imam for a sign to increase his certainty. The Imam said: "When you return to Kufa, a son named Isa will be born to you, followed by a son named Muhammad and two daughters. Their names are written with us in the Comprehensive Scroll (Sahifa Jami'a)." He then showed a yellow scroll containing the names of Shias until Judgment Day .

The Obedient Lion On a journey to Kufa, accompanied by scholars like Ibrahim ibn Adham, they encountered a lion blocking the road. While others were terrified, the Imam approached the lion, grabbed its ear, and moved it off the path. He then said: "If people obeyed God as He deserves, they could load their burdens onto lions" .

Harun al-Makki and the Oven A man from Khorasan suggested the Imam should revolt, claiming he had thousands of swordsmen ready. The Imam asked his servant to heat the oven. When it was blazing hot, he told the Khorasani: "Go sit in the oven." The man begged to be spared. Just then, Harun al-Makki, a loyal disciple, entered. The Imam told him: "Throw down your shoes and sit in the oven." Harun immediately obeyed and sat in the fire. The Imam continued conversing with the Khorasani about news from Khorasan. Finally, he told the man to look. He saw Harun sitting safely in the oven. The Imam asked: "How many like this do you have in Khorasan?" The man replied: "Not even one." The Imam said: "We do not rise when we do not even have five such helpers" .

Chapter 5: Harassment by the Abbasid Government

The Abbasid Caliph, Mansur al-Dawaniqi, summoned Imam Sadiq (AS) from Medina to Iraq several times, intending to kill him, but each time a miracle or the Imam's awe prevented him.

The Sword in the Scabbard One night, Mansur sent his captain, Rabi', to fetch the Imam immediately. Rabi' found the Imam praying. He dragged him to the palace without letting him finish his full attire. When the Imam entered, Mansur shouted, "I will kill you!" and reached for a sword hidden under his cushion. The Imam calmly defended himself: "I did not do what you accuse me of (rebellion)." Mansur pulled the sword out a hand-span. The Imam continued: "In my youth, I didn't do this; now that I am old, how could I?" Mansur pulled it further. Finally, Mansur looked down, sheathed the sword, and his anger vanished. He then honored the Imam, perfumed him with his own special musk, gave him a reward, and sent him home with respect. Later, Mansur admitted to Rabi': "When I summoned him, I was determined to kill him. But when he entered, I saw a gigantic serpent (or a vision of the Prophet) ready to swallow me and my palace if I harmed him." The Imam later taught Rabi' the prayers he had recited for protection .

The Fly and the Tyrant Once, a fly kept landing on Mansur's face. He shooed it away, but it returned again and again, annoying him greatly. He asked Imam Sadiq (AS): "Why did God create the fly?" The Imam instantly replied: "To humiliate the tyrants".

Chapter 6: Martyrdom

The Last Will Upon his deathbed, Imam Sadiq (AS) gathered all his relatives. When they assembled, he looked at them and said: "Verily, our intercession (Shafa'ah) will not reach the one who takes prayer (Salah) lightly" .

Succession Strategy To protect his true successor, Imam Musa al-Kazim (AS), from being murdered by Mansur, Imam Sadiq (AS) wrote a will naming five people as "trustees": Caliph Mansur himself, the governor of Medina, his eldest surviving son Abdullah, his son Musa (AS), and his wife Hamidah. When Mansur read the will, thinking he could identify and kill the successor, he saw his own name and was confused. He said: "I cannot kill these people." Thus, the Imam's life was saved through this wisdom .

Chapter 7: Children of the Imam

Ismail and the Issue of Bada' Ismail was the Imam's eldest son and very beloved. Many thought he would be the next Imam. However, Ismail died during his father's lifetime. When he died, the Imam uncovered his face repeatedly before burial to show witnesses that he was truly dead, to prevent future false claims about his occultation. He wrote "Ismail testifies there is no god but Allah" on his shroud .

Lady Nafisah Although not his direct daughter (she was the wife of his son Ishaq), Lady Nafisah is mentioned for her high station. She settled in Egypt and was renowned for her miracles. She dug her own grave in her house and recited the Quran in it 6,000 times before she died. When she passed away, the people of Egypt refused to let her body be taken to Medina, begging for her blessings to remain with them. She is buried in Cairo, and her shrine is a place of pilgrimage .

Chapter 8: Companions

Mu'min al-Taq (The Demon of the Arch) His name was Muhammad ibn Ali. He was a shopkeeper in the "Taq al-Mahamil" area of Kufa. Opponents called him "Shaytan al-Taq" (Demon of the Arch) because of his sharp wit and ability to distinguish counterfeit coins instantly, but the Imams called him "Mu'min al-Taq" (Believer of the Arch). He was a master debater. Once, he debated a Kharijite leader named Dahhak. Mu'min al-Taq asked: "Why do you consider killing Ali (AS) lawful?" Dahhak said: "Because he appointed a human arbitrator in religion." Mu'min al-Taq said: "If I prove you wrong from your own principles, will you accept?" Dahhak said yes. Mu'min al-Taq pointed to a man in the crowd and said: "Let this man be the judge between us if we disagree." Dahhak agreed. Mu'min al-Taq immediately exclaimed: "You have just become an infidel by your own logic! You appointed a human judge in a religious debate!" Dahhak was confounded .

Safwan al-Jammal He owned camels and often transported the Imam. One day, the Imam asked him: "Do you rent your camels to Harun al-Rashid (the Caliph)?" He said: "Yes, but only for his trip to Hajj." The Imam asked: "Do you wish for him to remain alive until he pays you your rent?" Safwan said yes. The Imam said: "Whoever wishes for the survival of the oppressors is one of them and will be in Hellfire." Safwan immediately went and sold all his camels to sever ties with the tyrant. Harun guessed the reason and said: "I know Musa ibn Ja'far told you to do this. If not for our long companionship, I would have killed you" .

The Final Story: The Servant and the Khorasani A loyal servant of the Imam was approached by a wealthy man from Khorasan. The Khorasani said: "I am rich but have no children. Let me take your place as the Imam's servant, and I will give you all my wealth." The servant was tempted. He went to the Imam and said: "I have served you long; allow me to accept this offer to secure my future." The Imam said: "I will not prevent you, but I advise you: On Judgment Day, the Prophet will cling to God's light, Ali to the Prophet, we to Ali, and our Shias to us. Wherever we enter, they enter." Hearing this, the servant wept and said: "I will never leave your service for the world." He returned to the Khorasani and rejected the offer. The Imam then prayed for the Khorasani and rewarded the servant with 1,000 gold coins .